Foreword

By regulation, the Center of Military History is responsible for determining the lineages and battle honors of the Army's units. Lineages and honors serve as a compact outline history. When provided to an individual unit in the form of a certificate over the signature of the Chief of Military History, they officially recognize that unit's organizational history and those campaign streamers and honors and heraldic items which it is entitled to bear. This volume gathers together the compact histories of all major military police units in the U.S. Army in order to perpetuate and publicize for the military police, soldiers throughout the Army, and the general public those traditions, honors, and devices proudly carried by the Military Police Corps.

Army leaders have long recognized that an awareness of a unit's history and traditions contributes directly to its esprit de corps. Today's Army, composed of professional soldiers, understands that a sense of unit pride is critical in the blending of its many specialized branches into the combined arms team needed to cope with the demands of the battlefield of the future.

Although the Military Police Corps will only celebrate its first half century in 1991, its soldiers can trace their heritage to the foundation of the Republic. Since the organization of the first unit in the Continental Army in 1778, military police have witnessed a steady increase in responsibilities, particularly during the wars of this century. I recommend that all members of the corps take time to increase their knowledge of the long and proud history of military police. We offer this volume as an introduction to that worthy enterprise.

Preface

This volume gathers in compact form the official historical records of 109 military police units—commands, camps, centers, brigades, groups, and battalions—the echelons authorized distinctive heraldic items. Included are all the Regular Army and Army Reserve units active between 1962 and 1987, as well as all Army National Guard organizations active as of 30 September 1987.

The lineage and honors of a unit provide an outline history of that unit, and the official certificate attesting to that history, prepared in the Organizational History Branch of the U.S. Army Center of Military History. The unit lineages in this book are adapted from these official certificates in a highly stylized document. The lineage begins with the official designation of the unit, followed by an approved special designation. The events in the life of a unit recorded in the official certificate are restricted to a few specific actions, such as activation, inactivation, and redesignation. The data has been compressed to save space, which accounts for the technical language used. A glossary appears at the end of the volume to assist the reader in understanding these technical terms. Campaigns and decorations for all the units are listed following each lineage. General orders announcing decorations are shown parenthetically.

The Organizational History Branch is responsible for the determination of the official unit lineages and honors, and the lineages that appear in this volume are the result of research done by many members of the branch, past and present. The undersigned compiled the lineages, and John E. Parker drafted the introduction. Dana Purdy assembled the bibliographies with the assistance of Charles E. Dornbusch's comprehensive bibliography entitled Histories, Personal Narratives, United States Army (Cornwallville, New York: Hope Farm Press, 1967), James Contravich's United States Army Unit Histories, A Reference and Bibliography (Manhattan, Kansas: Military Affairs/Aerospace Historian, 1983), and the U.S. Army Military History Institute's work in this area, compiled by George S. Pappas and entitled United States Army Unit Histories (Washington: Government Printing Office, 1978). Most of the unit histories cited are unofficial works that were prepared outside the Department of the Army. Joycelyn M. Canary edited the manuscript.

Descriptions of the shoulder sleeve insignia, distinctive insignia, and other heraldic items approved for the units are included with the lineages. These descriptions, as well as the color illustrations of the heraldic items, were furnished by The Institute of Heraldry, U.S. Army, and the Organizational History Branch is especially grateful to Opal Landrum, Nuala Barry, and Adele Richey for their valuable assistance. In some instances the text relating to the heraldic items approved for the units is not as comprehensive as in the original letters of approval, amendment, or redesignation sent to the units. Minor changes in the heraldic material have been made to meet the need for brevity in this volume. At the beginning of the color illustrations is a brief account of the evolution of these items.

Since the Center of Military History is responsible for the determination and publication of unit lineages and honors under Army Regulation 870-5, comments are invited and should be addressed to the Center at Washington, D.C. 20374-5088.

MILITARY POLICE

Introduction

The Military Police Corps achieved permanent status in the U.S. Army on 26 September 1941, yet its traditions of duty, service, and security date back to the Revolutionary War. Over the last two centuries the military police—or provost marshals as they were called during much of their history—evolved from a group of miscellaneous units and men organized on a temporary basis in time of national emergency to perform a limited range of law and order responsibilities into today's highly organized and trained combat support force. During the 1980s military police units carried out many of the wide-ranging duties they have assumed in the Army, such as fighting in Grenada; guarding the summer Olympics in Seoul, Korea; helping to quell civil disturbances in the Virgin Islands in the aftermath of Hurricane Hugo; and playing an essential role in JUST CAUSE, the Army's operation in Panama in 1989–1990. Based on a tradition of service that stretches back more than two hundred years, military police have come to be recognized as an important element of the Army in both peace and war.

The Military Police Corps traces its beginnings to the formation of a provost unit, the Marechaussee Corps, in the Continental Army.¹ Authorized by Congress on 27 May 1778 with a name borrowed from the French term for provost troops, the special unit was assigned by General George Washington to perform those necessary police functions required in camp and in the field. The first American military police unit was organized along the lines of a regular Continental Army company with 1 captain, 4 lieutenants, 1 clerk, 1 quartermaster sergeant, 2 trumpeters, 2 sergeants, 5 corporals, 43 provosts, and 4 executioners. Reflecting the unit's special requirements for speed and equipment, the corps was mounted and accoutered as light dragoons.

Washington appointed Bartholomew Von Heer provost marshal of the Continental Army and commander of the Marechaussee Corps with the rank of captain. Von Heer and his men were expected to patrol the camp and its vicinity in order to detain fugitives and arrest rioters and thieves. During combat the unit was to patrol behind the Army's so-called second line where it would secure the rear by rounding up stragglers and preventing desertions. It also assumed what in later times would be called the "early warning" responsibility, that is, keeping watch against enemy attack from the rear. The Marechaussee Corps also supervised relations with the sutlers, the merchants who supplied the Army, and assumed general responsibility for the collection, security, and movement of prisoners of war. A second, larger military police force, this one organized in 1779 by the Commonwealth of Virginia, administered the prisoner-of-war compound established at Charlottesville to secure the British and German soldiers captured at Saratoga. Although the existence of both units was short-lived—the prisoner guards were disbanded in 1781; the Marechaussee Corps at the end of the Revolution in 1783—their functions as well as their extraordinary mobility and communications capability established a legacy for the provost units that would follow.

No other military police units were formally organized in the U.S. Army until the outbreak of the Civil War, although commanders during that extended period often detailed certain officers and men to perform similar functions. This method, deemed unsatisfactory in many respects, nevertheless helped maintain order and discipline during the War of 1812, the Mexican War, and frequent clashes with Indian tribes along the frontier.

Increasingly during this period the Army came to assume new responsibilities that called for units capable of extending national security authority along the new nation's frontiers. Serving essentially as military police, federal troops played a vital role throughout the settlement of the trans-Appalachian West. Because of the proximity of Army outposts and the general scarcity of civil law enforcement authority, settlers looked to the military as the primary source of law and order.

Not only were federal units used to police many of the towns and lines of communications along the new American frontier, they also assumed responsibility for quelling some of the civil disturbances which occurred during the period. An important example of federal troops being used in this manner occurred in the summer of 1794 during the so-called Whiskey Rebellion. Faced with a large-scale threat to law and order by farmers in western Pennsylvania who were up in arms against the newly imposed excise tax on whiskey, President Washington ordered the federalization of militia units, which marched in force to the scene of the troubles.² While not military police in the strict sense of the term, these troops assumed police duties, made numerous arrests, and occupied several counties, performing provost marshal functions that would become standard in the future.

A commander's military police responsibilities received greater recognition in 1821 when the War Department tried, through a series of general regulations, to establish a uniformity of organizations within the Army. Article 58 of these regulations, entitled "General Police," outlined the duties of military police and recommended that commanders select personnel of superior intelligence and physical ability to perform these duties. Significantly, throughout the Army's history these qualities have always been identified as prerequisites for the soldiers selected to perform military police duties. But the regulation made no provision for special training for these provost troops, nor did it order the organization of military police units, maintaining that military police forces would, in usual circumstances, be assigned temporary status within larger military organizations.³

The Civil War created an urgent need for provost marshals and military police units within the federal Army. As early as 18 July 1861, Brig. Gen. Irvin McDowell, the Union Army's first field commander, authorized the commander of each regiment in the Department of Northeastern Virginia to select a commissioned officer as regimental provost marshal along with a permanent guard of ten enlisted men. McDowell was responding to reports of widespread marauding in the ranks as his units marched across northern Virginia on the way to Bull Run. He wanted these units assigned the "special and sole duty" of preserving property from depredation and of arresting "all wrong-doers, of whatever regiment or corps they may be." Wrongdoers, he went on to order, "will be reported to headquarters, and the least that will be done to them will be to send them to the Alexandria jail." In those early days of the war, commanders were particularly sensitive to the political implications of interfering with local law enforcement, and McDowell also made it clear that his provosts were not to arrest civilians. His troops were to fight the enemy, "not to judge and punish the unarmed and helpless, however guilty they may be."⁴

In the wake of the Union's defeat at Bull Run, the newly appointed commander of the Army of the Potomac, Maj. Gen. George B. McClellan, reported "with much regret" that large numbers of soldiers stationed in the vicinity of the capital were in the habit of frequenting the streets and hotels of the city. Calling the practice "eminently prejudicial to good order and military discipline," he appointed Col. Andrew Porter provost marshal of Washington and assigned him the duty of keeping the officers and men in camp unless under special pass.⁵ He gave Porter some 1,000 officers and men—all the Regulars in the city, including infantry, cavalry, and artillery units—to suppress gambling, marauding, and looting in the capital area and to intercept stragglers and fugitives from nearby Army units. To carry out its mission, the provost guard was allowed to impose curfews on soldiers, all of whom were obliged to carry passes. Eventually, Porter was also empowered to search citizens, seize weapons and contraband, and make arrests.⁶ Thus began the gradual extension of the jurisdiction of provost marshals during the Civil War from responsibility for maintaining law and order within the military to include the protection and, to some extent, the control of the civilian population.

Although organized military police units were relatively rare in the Union Army, General McClellan established the Office of Provost Marshal General of the Army of the Potomac and appointed Colonel Porter, lately returned from his duties in Washington, to command the unit. McClellan gave Porter a sizable force to carry out military police functions in his army, including battalions from the 8th and 17th Infantry and the entire 2d Cavalry, as well as several units of Regular artillery. McClellan later enumerated the duties of his provost marshal, which, in addition to those already made familiar by Porter's troops in Washington, included regulation of places of public accommodation and amusement, distribution of passes to civilians for purposes of trade within the lines, and "searches, seizures, and arrests" within the army area.⁷

Porter coordinated, but did not supervise, the activities of the provost units. McClellan was also organizing in the separate divisions of the Army of the Potomac. Following Porter's appointment, McClellan ordered each of his division commanders to organize a provost guard within his command. Serving under a divisional provost marshal, again with an enlisted strength of ten men, these units were primarily responsible for protecting civilian property from the sometimes sticky hands of soldiers on the march as well as all other duties associated with the discipline and orderly activities of the army. They also carried on the many collateral duties already made familiar in the Continental Army. They supervised and otherwise inspected the trade between local private merchants and Army units and individual soldiers, and they also assumed certain intelligence responsibilities, collecting and disseminating information on enemy forces.

Rivaling the work of military police in the field, provost marshals also assumed the enormous task of enforcing the nation's first conscription law. When demands for manpower led the Union to abandon its dependence on volunteer enlistments and turn to conscription, Congress created the Office of the Provost Marshal General of the Army on 3 March 1863 and appointed James B. Fry to the position in the rank of colonel of cavalry.⁸ The new draft law charged the provost marshal general with overseeing the administration and enforcement of military recruitment and conscription along with a number of other quasi-military police duties associated with the war effort. It also empowered Fry to arrest summarily anyone engaged in impeding or avoiding conscription.⁹

The energetic Fry quickly organized a small army of civilian bureaucrats to supervise the draft calls. To assist him in this and an ever-increasing number of other duties largely unrelated to the draft, the War Department authorized the creation on 28 April 1863 of a new organization, the Invalid Corps (later renamed the Veteran Reserve Corps). Manned by soldiers wounded on the battlefield or weakened by illness and judged unfit for further frontline service, this special force reached a strength of more than 30,000 officers and men by the end of the war. Its units served as provost guards in large cities and towns, escorts for prisoners of war, security guards for railroads, and during the raid on Washington in 1864, they were committed to battle when the enemy penetrated into rear areas.

One of their most important functions remained to guard the many district draft offices established by the provost marshal general to supervise the selection of men under the provisions of the draft act. That legislation proved extremely unpopular and placed the Invalid Corps in a perilous position when massive resistance to conscription spread across the North. Their most notable service came in the valiant but futile effort to preserve order at the outbreak of the riots that shook New York City in July 1863. Few in number, the provost troops were quickly overwhelmed. The riots continued unimpeded until Washington brought in more than 100,000 combat troops, ending what would become the nation's deadliest civil disturbance.¹⁰

Following the pattern set at the end of the Revolutionary War, the Office of Provost Marshal General was discontinued in 1866. In fact, despite the appointment of Brig. Gen. Arthur MacArthur as military governor and provost marshal general of Manila in the Philippines after the War with Spain in 1898, the creation of a permanent military police branch in the Army would not be seriously considered until the latter stages of World War I. Ironically, it was during this period of organizational neglect that the term "military police" first came into vogue in Army circles.

World War I marked a significant step in the military police's journey toward permanent branch status within the Army. Once again the Army organized units both at the War Department level and in the field to carry out military police duties. Following America's entry into the war in 1917, the War Department appointed Maj. Enoch H. Crowder provost marshal general of the Army. Again the paramount mission of this official and the units placed under his command was to administer a selective service law. In July 1917 General John J. Pershing appointed Lt. Col. Hanson E. Ely as provost marshal general of the American Expeditionary Forces (AEF) to advise him "on military police and provost marshal matters." And finally, in May 1918, the War Department created yet another military police organization on the Army staff, the Criminal Investigation Division (CID).

Charged with investigating criminal wrongdoing within the service, the CID was organized along the lines of a detective squad similar to those found in any large city police department of the era. Initially the CID consisted of eight companies, each with 5 officers and 100 enlisted men. Its members were selected by the provost marshals in the various army areas from among those soldiers with civilian experience as police detectives, lawyers, and journalists. Its full organizational structure was not established until the last weeks of the war. During 1918 the CID was involved in some 4,500 cases pertaining to the investigation of black market activities, fraudulent passes sold in troop areas, worthless check-cashing operations, mail theft, and theft and illegal sale of government supplies.¹¹

Anticipating the need for military police in the AEF, the War Department approved a divisional table of organization in May 1917 that included authorization of a headquarters and two military police companies, a total of 316 officers and men in each division. Based on this guidance, the AEF organized two military police companies in the 1st Division in July, marking the first use of an organization officially called military police. General Pershing's plan called for placing these companies in the divisional train. Divisional returns of 4 September 1917 listed 95 men in the 1st Division's train headquarters and two military police companies with a strength of 150 and 152 officers and men respectively.¹² To supplement the direct support units, a general support military police regiment, the First Army Headquarters Regiment, was formed by converting a French-speaking New Hampshire National Guard infantry organization and filling it out with men with civilian experience as detectives.

During the war the AEF organized military police units in sixty-one separate divisions, but in July 1918 Pershing also received permission to organize military police units in each corps and army with additional separate companies posted to the various sections of the Service of Supply, the Training Depot, and "to tactical units as may be necessary."¹³ Ironically, the increase in the number of military police companies resulted in a weakening in the strength of all military police companies in the AEF, because Pershing was forced to cut down on the size and number of divisional military police units in order to provide trained manpower for the new units.¹⁴ In the months following the end of hostilities, the AEF could count military police battalions in each of its three armies with a fourth battalion attached to the AEF's general headquarters at Chaumont, France.

The AEF's military police performed all those activities made familiar in earlier wars but with some significant additions. A constant concern of senior commanders in this era of massive military units fighting on wide fronts was the control of traffic in the rear areas and prevention of unauthorized individuals from entering the zones of operations. Borrowing a method devised by the French, Brig. Gen. Harry H. Bandholtz, a successor to Ely as the AEF provost marshal general, organized military police units to check all individuals traveling in leave areas, major cities, and examining points in rear Army areas.

World War I also altered the Army's traditional way of administering and caring for prisoners of war. In distinction to most earlier conflicts, where prisoners of war were usually held for short periods of time until exchanges could be effected, World War I created massive numbers of prisoners that had to be confined for long periods. During the ten-month period in which the United States processed foreign troops through its temporary prisoner-of-war camps, escort guard companies of military police handled some 48,000 prisoners. These guard companies were responsible for transporting all prisoners from division cages to a central prisoner-of-war enclosure. Reminiscent of the Civil War, soldiers judged unfit for full combat duty manned these companies.

Although the need for military police was universally recognized and thousands of men were performing military police functions throughout the Army, the pressing need for their services left selection of personnel haphazard and specialized professional training limited. General Bandholtz had established a service school at Autun, France, during the last months of the war that trained and graduated over 4,000 officers and men during its brief existence. Nevertheless, familiar patterns continued to persist. Men, usually with no experience in such duties, were drafted out of military units and thrust into military police organizations where they were expected to learn on the job.

The existence of a formal branch, especially if perpetuated in the peacetime Army, would allow for the systematic selection of personnel based on aptitude and fitness for these duties. It would also lead to a permanent training establishment where men could receive specialized instruction before assignment to regularly organized military police units throughout the Army. Then military police could be expected to have special supervision during a systemized training program before assignment to units. The promises implicit in the formation of such a corps were not to be fulfilled. Although under wartime legislation, Congress finally authorized establishment of a Military Police Corps, it was not until the closing weeks of the war, on 15 October 1918,¹⁵

The new corps was to consist of the Provost Marshal General Department, AEF, all military police units in the AEF, and "additional personnel." The basic organizational unit remained the military police company, which as of October 1918 consisted of 205 officers and men. Equipment for the AEF military police company was listed in the new legislation. Including 50 horses, 6 mules, 1 wagon, 18 motorcycles, and 105 bicycles, it was one of the most mobile organizations in the Army.

With the cessation of hostilities, the military police in the AEF were made extra busy by the hordes of American GIs who took unauthorized leave to see "Paree" and the other fabled sights of a Europe now at peace. At the time of the Armistice agreement, the strength of the new corps stood at 463 officers and 15,912 men, who were stationed throughout France and with those troops of the Third Army who would participate in the occupation of the Rhineland.

In an effort to preserve the new branch as the Army entered its usual post-war drawdown in strength and also to preserve and document the role played by military police during the war, General Bandholtz requested all division commanders to submit reports concerning military police activities in their areas. Most of these reports strongly endorsed the work of the corps, and subsequently Bandholtz proposed to the War Department that a permanent military police corps be retained in the Regular Army. Citing the inadequacies in assigning nonspecialists to such technically demanding duties, he stressed the obvious point that a permanent corps would ensure the existence of stable and efficient military police units in future emergencies.¹⁶

Although Congress rejected the idea of a permanent corps, it did ratify the permanent organization of military police units in the Army in the National Defense Act of 1920. To save spaces in the Regular divisions, Congress combined the headquarters company and military police company. It also organized a Military Police Branch in the Officers' Reserve Corps. In the 1920s military police duties were once again performed by troops drawn from posts, camps, and stations and tactical units, usually on the basis of rosters drawn up by local commanders. Provost marshals existed in the reserve commands but never above the corps area level. Despite its organizational preservation in the severely reduced postwar Army, the military police function was again allowed to drift.

With the outbreak of war in Europe in 1939 the creation of a military police corps became almost a necessity. In conjunction with a rising national concern over possible subversion and the perceived need to control hostile aliens, the Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson appointed Maj. Gen. Allen W. Guillon, the adjutant general of the Army, as acting provost marshal on 31 July 1941. To meet the demands associated with an army mobilizing for war, the War Department also recognized that a centralized authority above the corps level was necessary. On 26 September 1941, the official birthday of the corps, the secretary of war established the Military Police Corps as a permanent branch of the Army.¹⁷

The duties of the new branch were published the day the United States declared war.¹⁸ The military police became responsible for investigating all crimes and offenses committed by persons "subject to military law within the area under the control of the organization to which they are assigned or attached." The branch was also charged with fighting crime, enforcing all police regulations pertaining to their area, reporting violations of orders "given by them in the proper execution of their duties regardless of the grade or status of the offender," and preventing the commission of acts "which are subversive of discipline or that cast discredit in any way on the United States Army." The branch was expected to perform those duties traditionally associated with their specialty—controlling the movement of traffic both in the battlefield area as well as in camps, posts, and stations; safeguarding soldiers from violence or accidents; recovering lost, stolen, and abandoned property within the Army; and relieving combat organizations of the custody of prisoners of war and operating the prisoner-of-war system—along with some new military duties, including assisting in destroying hostile airborne troops when combat troops were unavailable or inadequate to the task.

The enforcement of military laws and regulations, the maintenance of order, and the control of traffic remained the most important wartime duties of the military police. But as usual in wartime, the corps was also expected to assume some duties more usually associated with civilian law enforcement. These included protecting designated buildings, public works, and localities of special importance from pillage, sabotage, and damage; supervising and controlling the evacuation and repatriation of civilian populations; assisting in the enforcement of gas defense, passive antiaircraft measures, and black-outs; and performing security investigations and other general measures for security and secrecy.

To perform military police responsibilities in the field, the War Department authorized larger military police units, with the battalion (later in the war it changed to group) prescribed as the largest unit in higher headquarters. It created the position of provost marshal general to serve on the staff of these headquarters to assist the commanders "in the supervision and operation of police matters." Describing it as a wartime measure, the War Department also authorized the appointment of a provost marshal general at each general headquarters or theater of operations and on the staff of all divisions and higher units. In distinction to those serving in the tactical units, these general headquarters officers, with certain exceptions, were assigned to the special staff and exercised no command function over the military police units in the command.

The War Department initially organized three new battalions and four separate companies of military police from already existing assets. It also transferred all officers and enlisted men performing military police duties as well as all units performing such functions to the new corps. As a consequence, by mid-1942 the number of military police units had increased to seventeen battalions organized under the tables of organization. By that time, as the Army was rapidly expanding toward its full wartime strength, military police companies had become increasingly specialized as planning became more sophisticated. Some served exclusively as zone of interior guards, escort guards, and post, camp, and station garrisons. Others focused on duties relating to prisoners of war or in security processing while still another large number of companies became exclusively involved in criminal investigations. The corps, which started with a paltry 2,000 men in 1941, grew to a strength of more than 200,000 during the course of the war.

As a result of the rapid expansion of the military police and the ever-increasing need for trained personnel, the corps created the Military Police Service School at the Arlington Cantonment, Fort Myer, Virginia, on 19

December 1941. The school was similar to the one established in France in 1918 for training military police in the AEF. Its curriculum emphasized internal security and intelligence functions. The Provost Marshal General's School, as it was renamed on 15 January 1942, had four basic departments: Military Law, Traffic Control, Police Methods, and Criminal Investigation. The corps also established a replacement training center and a unit training center. By V-J Day some 40,000 men had processed through the replacement training center.

Based on its experiences during the war and faced with the challenge of a new conflict in Korea, the Department of the Army issued new guidance concerning the responsibilities and organization of the military police in September 1950.¹⁹ It redefined the responsibilities of the provost marshals who henceforth would not only advise the commander on policy matters, but directly supervise the operations of the military police of the command.

The Korean War also introduced a new duty for military police. The war witnessed a dramatic increase in black market activities associated with an army fighting in a third world nation. In previous decades control of the black market fell to civil affairs units, but the massiveness of the problem that began to appear in 1951 quickly involved the resources of the military police and, eventually, the corps added control and eradication of black market activities to its list of responsibilities.²⁰ Noting that the destruction caused by military operations and the usual local shortages of supplies in occupied territories created an extensive demand for items such as cigarettes, gasoline, food, weapons, and vehicles, the Department of the Army called on the military police, subject to the Uniform Code of Military Justice, to detect and apprehend military personnel and civilians participating in black-marketing.

In ensuing decades America's involvement in Southeast Asia brought about yet another significant expansion in military police responsibilities, underscoring new and varied uses for military police in a war without defined rear areas. In addition to their usual wartime functions, military police units served in a direct combat support role. They provided convoy security, often escorting supplies and equipment through districts subject to direct enemy attack. They controlled traffic throughout the four combat zones where front lines had ceased to exist in the usual sense of the word. They secured highways and bridges against both local subversives and North Vietnamese regulars. They joined combat troops in the hazardous task of locating and destroying enemy tunnels. They supervised the movement of refugees and the control of political detainees in a war where determining friends and enemies could be a deadly decision. Military police also became frontline fighters during the successful effort to repel the North Vietnamese during the Tet offensive in 1968. At one point in the war military police were given exclusive responsibility for a specific tactical area, including responsibility for civic action functions in that area.²¹

This increase in responsibility was recognized organizationally by the expansion in the number of military police units in Vietnam and by their organization for command and control purposes under a military police brigade.²² The seven military police battalions that served in Vietnam were organized into three military police groups: the 8th performed all criminal investigative work in the theater; the 16th provided command and control of all military police units assigned to the I and II tactical zones; the 89th controlled those units in zones III and IV. These units in turn were organized under the 18th Military Police Brigade, the first military police unit of its level to be employed in the Army. The brigade commander also served as provost marshal of the Military Assistance Command, Vietnam.

During 1968 the Army Chief of Staff, acknowledging the Military Police Corps' active involvement in support of military operations in Vietnam, approved changing the branch's identification from combat service support to combat support. This change was clearly justified by the responsibilities assumed by the corps in Vietnam where military police units were organized, trained, and equipped to perform operations in a combat support role. As a combat support branch, the Military Police Corps was placed under the U.S. Army Regimental System in September 1986.²³

The experience of Vietnam and the implementation of AirLand Battle doctrine for the battlefield of the future placed further responsibilities upon the military police in recent years. In 1988 the Army redefined and enlarged the branch's battlefield mission as first outlined in the publication of AirLand doctrine in 1986. Army doctrine posited that where in previous wars military police usually performed a rear security role, the battlefield of the future would find the need for protection against rear area threats vastly increased.²⁴ The military police in the rear area must be ready and able for short periods of time to assume a direct combat role. The battle of the future, the new doctrine presupposed, would be fast paced and short in duration. Therefore the military police unit, with its special ability to move and communicate with great speed and with its possession of unusually heavy firepower for such a highly mobile unit, could significantly enhance a commander's combat options. In addition, its versatility in controlling traffic and troop movement would allow commanders to mobilize much more quickly than in the past. In a future when a small force structure would be used in low intensity conflicts worldwide, military police could be expected to play an increasingly important operational role.

The assets that make the Military Police Corps so valuable in contemporary battlefield doctrine are actually quite similar to those possessed by the Marechaussee Corps in the Revolutionary War. While traveling a difficult road to organizational permanence and recognition as an organic element of the Army's fighting team, military police have along the way carefully adapted their mobility and communications capability to a myriad of new duties and responsibilities, leaving the corps ready to assume greater responsibilities and duties in the Army of the future.

Heraldic Items

Heraldic items for Army organizations reflect history, tradition, ideals, mission, and accomplishments. Shoulder sleeve insignia and distinctive unit insignia have been designed so that each is distinctive to the organization for which approved. Both serve as identifying devices and contribute to unit cohesiveness.

While the custom of bearing various symbols on shields, helmets, and flags existed in antiquity, heraldry was not introduced until the Middle Ages. The use of heraldic devices became more prevalent with the increased use of armor and the requirements for insignia to assist in distinguishing friend from foe on the battlefield. The designs included mythological beasts, symbols commemorative of incidents of valor, and other identifying marks to which specific symbolism was ascribed. Gradually a formal system of heraldry evolved, complete with rules for design, use, and display.

The currently authorized embroidered shoulder sleeve insignia had their origin during World War I. They serve the same purpose as the corps of symbols (badges) in use during the Civil War and the War with Spain. The corps badges were of simple design; most could be cut from a single piece of cloth, e.g., a four-leaf clover, a heart, a star, a winged horsefoot, a caltrop, and a spearhead. Such devices were easily remembered and readily identified. Not only were they worn by the soldiers on their headgear, but also they were incorporated in the organizations' flags.

The first shoulder sleeve insignia is believed to have been worn by the men of the 81st Division during World War I. On their voyage to France they adopted as their insignia the figure of a wildcat that was in use as a distinctive marking for the division's equipment. Wear of the insignia was officially approved October 19, 1918, by a telegram from the Adjutant General, American Expeditionary Forces, to the division's commanding general. Insignia for other organizations of the American Expeditionary Forces were later authorized and designs were officially approved. Designs varied greatly. Many had their origin in designs already in use for organizational and equipment markings; others were based on monograms and geometric figures alluding to designations. Symbols associated with traditions, geographical locations, and missions of the organizations were also in some designs.

Since World War I, the authorization of shoulder sleeve insignia has expanded along with organizational and other changes within the Army.* Most soldiers now wear shoulder sleeve insignia. Many designs are more elaborate than those of World War I. The more complex designs came into being because of an increase in the number of authorized insignia and the availability of embroidery machinery for production of various types of textile insignia. During the Vietnam era the policy governing the wear of subdued insignia as well as full-color items was established.

Distinctive insignia of metal and enamel are authorized for separate battalions and higher echelons. These insignia may be traced to the use of metal and enamel badges authorized to be worn instead of the cloth badges during the War with Spain. The type of distinctive insignia currently in use was first authorized during the 1920s for regiments and some other units. As in the case of shoulder sleeve insignia the authorization was expanded as changes in organization of the Army took place. The designs are based on symbols reflecting the organization's lineage, battle honors, traditions, and mission. Usually they incorporate the organization's motto, which is often of an idealistic nature.

Shoulder sleeve and distinctive insignia worn on the uniform and the distinguishing flags are highly visible items of identification. They are significant factors in Army esprit de corps.

COAT OF ARMS

Shield: Vert, a fasces palewise, axe or and rods proper (brown); thereover in fess a balance and in saltire overall a key with bow in sinister base and a sword with hilt in dexter base all of the second.

Crest: On a wreath of the colors, or and vert, a pair of crossed pistols of the first.

Motto: Assist, Protect, Defend.

Symbolism: Green and yellow are the colors associated with the Military Police Corps. The fasces is an ancient symbol of authority related to a Roman magistrate. The balance is symbolic of equal justice under law and the key signifies security. The sword represents the military.

The crossed pistols are the symbol of the Military Police Corps mission: to uphold the law and to keep order.

SHOULDER SLEEVE INSIGNIA

Description: On a green shield, arched at the top, a yellow vertical stylized double-bitted key with a pierced trifoliate bow all within a yellow border.

Symbolism: The key is symbolic of authority, command, control, fidelity, and wardenship. The double bits refer to the evacuation and process of prisoners of war and/or civilian internees from field army areas to prisoner of war camps. The stem of the key in simulating the letter "I" also alludes to investigation, interrogation, and internment. The three prongs of the bits and the three foils of the bow refer to the organization's mission of providing command, administration, and logistical assistance to prisoner of war camps. The open or pierced foils of the bow simulate the letter "C," the Roman numeral "100," the three foils thus signifying the numeral "300," the numerical designation of the command. The end of the key stem is pointed to denote the ability of the elements of the organization to engage in effective, coordinated defense of the unit's area or installation. The colors yellow and green are used for the Military Police Corps.

DISTINCTIVE INSIGNIA

Description: A gold insignia consisting of a green arched doorway and centered thereon a gold key with double bit in base, the bow formed by three letter "Cs" conjoined and the key stem surmounted by a white five-pointed star.

Symbolism: Green and yellow are the colors associated with the Military Police branch. The key and star are symbolic of command and control. The doorway suggests the prisoner of war mission, and the number of camps that may be serviced (up to ten) is indicated by the ten sides of the star. The three "Cs," which form the bow, refer to the numerical designation of the unit.

Symbolism: Green and yellow are the colors associated with Military Police. The broken sword suggests the enemy's capture and thus his inability to fight. The keys, symbolic of control, are placed over the sword indicating the unit's responsibility for the incarcerated. The rose was adapted from the insignia of a subordinate unit, which used it as an award for certain soldiers in recognition of their outstanding devotion to duty. Here, it represents esprit de corps and is placed on a background that implies sun rays from the "Sunshine State" where the unit is based.

Symbolism: The portcullis represents custody and protection of prisoners of war and the security of the country and community. The dagger behind the gate is symbolic of the containment of a military threat. The three white stars are taken from the flag of Tennessee where the unit is located. The color scarlet is used to suggest vigilance and courage. SHOULDER SLEEVE INSIGNIA

Description: On a vertical rectangle arched at the top and bottom with a green border, a field divided per saltire green and yellow and thereon a red battle-axe and sword in saltire surmounted by a white four-pointed star.

Symbolism: The compass points stand for the four corners of the battlefield and the four following combat missions of the Military Police Corps: battlefield circulation and control; law and order; rear battle operations; and enemy prisoners of war. The battle-axe and/or fasces and the sword symbolize the magistrate's authority and the unit's combat mission. The number 14 is represented by the crossed background and weapons recalling the Roman numeral "X" for 10 with the 4 points on the compass star adding up to 14. Green and yellow are the branch colors of Military Police, and red is for courage and action.

DISTINCTIVE INSIGNIA

Description: A gold insignia consisting of a gold triangle with fourteen rays, in base a green circle with center bar between a red triangle and a black inverted triangle, area between circle and above scroll ribbed gold, all above a green scroll, with black lining, inscribed in gold letters, "We Give Our Best."

Symbolism: The circle with a horizontal center bar signifies "stop—do not enter" in international traffic lore and is used here to allude to the unit's mission to protect life and property. The chevron shape represents authority (area above red triangle and behind upper half of green circle). The color red is used to symbolize courage and awareness and black to typify prudence and wisdom. Black is also used here as a symbol of the Black Forest of Germany, the country in which the unit was activated. The fourteen sun rays allude to leadership and further distinguish the numerical designation of the organization.

SHOULDER SLEEVE INSIGNIA

Description: On a green shield within a yellow embattled border, a yellow griffin's head erased with red tongue and white eye.

Symbolism: Green and yellow are the colors used for Military Police. The griffin, symbol for eternal vigilance, within an embattled border, alludes to the military establishment and refers to the mission of a Military Police brigade. The fifteen projections comprising the embattled border allude to the numerical designation, 15th Military Police Brigade.

DISTINCTIVE INSIGNIA

Description: A gold insignia consisting of a gold pike above and surmounting the upper portion of a continuous green scroll bearing the inscription, "Duty, Justice, and Loyalty," in gold letters in base.

Symbolism: Green and yellow are the colors used for Military Police. The pike, a weapon used by provosts in the Middle Ages, symbolizes the basic mission of the brigade. The three points of the pike further allude to the organization's three missions of command, staff planning, and supervision of military police operations in peace and war.

SHOULDER SLEEVE INSIGNIA

Description: On a dark green oblong arched at top and base a light green globe with dark green gridlines bearing a five-pointed yellow star throughout and issuing from the lower edge of the globe to the height of the lateral arms of the star a yellow acute angle bearing a dark green arrowhead throughout its length with the lower edge of its blades coinciding with the lower edge of the star, all within a yellow border.

Symbolism: Green and yellow are the colors used for Military Police, and a star is emblematic of that branch of service. A star also connotes leadership and authority. The arrowhead is a symbol for military preparedness and protection. All of the above, along with the globe, symbolize the overall mission, capabilities, and operational sphere of the organization.

TAB

Description: Immediately above and touching the shoulder sleeve insignia, a black arc tab inscribed "AIRBORNE" in yellow letters.

DISTINCTIVE INSIGNIA

Description: A gold insignia consisting of a diagonal band divided throughout by a radiant partition line, gold and scarlet, all within a green annulet, the upper part inscribed with the motto "Combat Support" in gold letters and the lower part surmounted by two gold sprigs of oak leaves; overall an upright white sword, the point between the two words of the motto and the pommel extending beyond the leaves and the lower part of the annulet.

Symbolism: The sword surmounting the band of flames represents military justice overcoming the fires of conflict and violence. The design refers to the basic mission of the Military Police Corps, the maintenance of law and order. The white sword, used on the insignia of many U.S. Army organizations in Vietnam, and the colors red and yellow from the flag of the Republic of Vietnam stand for service in that country. The oak leaves are for strength and also allude to the state tree of Maryland where the unit was originally organized. The colors green and yellow are for the Military Police Corps.

SHOULDER SLEEVE INSIGNIA

Description: On a green shield, overall a yellow wall of two crenelles above three green wavy bars, issuing from base and surmounted overall a white pike all within a yellow border.

Symbolism: The fortification above the wavy bars alludes to the wall surrounding the fifteenth city of Rhodes, capital of the island of Rhodes, after which Rhode Island was named. The wavy bars also represent Narragansett Bay and the many waterways of the state. The pike, an early weapon used by guards, symbolizes the 43d Military Police Brigade's ability to give protection and strong support. Green and yellow are the colors used for Military Police units.

DISTINCTIVE INSIGNIA

Description: A gold insignia consisting of a gold anchor vertically bisecting a horizontal white wavy band on a green background all encircled by a continuous gold scroll, divided in four folds, the upper three inscribed "Protect the Right" in green letters.

Symbolism: Green and yellow are the colors used by the Military Police. The gold anchor adapted from the Rhode Island state flag and the wavy band simulating the water of Narragansett Bay allude to the home area of the organization.

Description: On a shield, within a yellow border, a field divided horizontally with yellow above and blue below; on the yellow portion is a red disc with twelve teeth and a yellow center and on the blue portion a yellow vertical diamond.

Symbolism: The elements of the design symbolize the discovery of gold in California, alluding to the brigade's state of origin and to its numerical designation. The yellow of the background refers to California's popular nickname, "The Golden State." The red disc denotes the state's sunny climate and alludes further to Sutter's Mill, a sawmill located on the American River (represented by the wavy blue area), where the first gold nuggets, indicated by the yellow diamond shape, were discovered in California in 1849.

DISTINCTIVE INSIGNIA

Description: A gold insignia consisting of a black bear's paw with claws pointed upwards in the center of a gold sun on a blue disc contained by a circular gold scroll bearing the motto "Pride and Power" in black, the lower ends of the scroll connected by gold links to a red band about the wrist of the bear's paw.

Symbolism: The gold sun set in blue is symbolic of the Californians' pride in their state. The bear's paw is suggested by the powerful animal on the crest of the California Army National Guard, and the band about the wrist denotes reliable control.

SHOULDER SLEEVE INSIGNIA

Description: On a disc with a yellow border, nine vertical alternating green and yellow stripes and centered thereon a scarlet eight-pointed star, bearing at center overall a white sword, point up, surmounted by a yellow dragon's head.

Symbolism: Green and yellow are the colors associated with Military Police. The star is symbolic of courage and law enforcement. The eight points and the nine stripes suggest the unit's numerical designation. The sword represents military justice, law, and order. The dragon represents authority and guardianship and alludes to the unit's original activation in the Republic of Vietnam.

DISTINCTIVE INSIGNIA

Description: A gold insignia consisting of a green oriental dragon's head grasping in its mouth a stalk of gold bamboo fired a red flame at both ends and supporting an arched black scroll bearing the inscription, "Proven in Battle," in gold letters.

Symbolism: Green and yellow are the colors used for Military Police. The dragon, a fierce adversary, is the heraldic symbol for defender of the lawful leader and denotes the Republic of Vietnam where the unit was originally activated. The black scroll represents law, jurisdiction, and jurisprudence, and the flames allude to the unit's many combat engagements.

- Description:* A yellow circular insignia edged with a green border, consisting of a twelve-spoke green gear wheel bearing two yellow keys in bend addorsed, the sinister inverted, and interlaced with two yellow keys in bend sinister addorsed, the sinister inverted.
- Symbolism:* Green and yellow are the colors associated with Military Police. The gear wheel suggests the heraldic term “embattled” representing a fortress and reflects the unit’s involvement in defense. The keys allude to the organization’s mission of protection and law enforcement. The gear wheel also represents Detroit, the “Motor City,” present location of the unit.

DISTINCTIVE INSIGNIA

- Description:* A gold insignia consisting of a green background bearing at each side a gold snow-capped mountain peak and at base a blue background bearing two white wavy bars, overall a vertical double-warded gold key bearing a black gear wheel charged with a white five-pointed star, all enclosed by a continuous four-folded gold scroll inscribed at side, top, and side, “Protect Defend Preserve,” all in green letters.
- Symbolism:* The snow-capped mountain peaks symbolize the organization’s war service in the Aleutian Islands during World War II. The upright key alludes to the unit’s mission of protection and apprehension. The five-pointed star, a symbol of achievement and authority, was suggested by the state flag of Alaska and the city flag of Detroit. The gear wheel also represents Detroit, the “Motor City,” and present location of the unit. The wavy blue and white bars represent Lake Superior, Lake Huron, Lake Michigan, and other waters around the upper and lower peninsulas that make up the state of Michigan. Green and yellow are colors used for Military Police units.

SHOULDER SLEEVE INSIGNIA

Description: On a yellow disc, overall a green annulet issuing from green pikes from within, interlaced saltirewise with points up, all within a yellow border.

Symbolism: The pikes, former weapons used by guards, are interlaced to symbolize strength and protection within the law. The pikes “two” then “two” with the annulet further distinguish the organization’s numerical designation “220.” The annulet also alludes to the unit’s speed and mobility in carrying out its mission. Green and yellow are the colors used for Military Police units.

DISTINCTIVE INSIGNIA

Description: Gold insignia consisting of a disc divided horizontally, the upper half of green with four gold lateral lines evenly spaced throughout, the lower half of black; overall and extending beyond top and base the head of a two-bladed gold halberd bearing a green five-pointed star, and inscribed around the lower portion of the disc left of the ferrule, “Support,” and right of the ferrule, “By Doing,” all in gold letters.

Symbolism: Green and yellow are the colors used for the Military Police Corps. Heraldically, the color black typifies constancy and fidelity, both necessary to orderly processes. The halberd through tradition connotes vigilance, and a star is emblematic of leadership and authority; together they represent the overall mission of the organization. The blades of the halberd refer to offensive and defensive capability, while the disc simulates a wheel connoting mobility.

SHOULDER SLEEVE INSIGNIA

Description: On a green shield a gold griffin's head above a gold sun rising in splendor from a wavy blue base all within a green border.

Symbolism: Green and yellow are the colors used for the Military Police Corps. The mythological griffin, symbol of strength, vigilance, agility, and protection, refers to the overall mission of the organization. Also, through association, a griffin has historical significance to the organization and legendary association to California, the unit's present home area. The sun, revealer of truth and symbol of authority, is symbolic of jurisprudence and with the wavy blue base simulates a coast, further indicating the unit's present location.

DISTINCTIVE INSIGNIA

Description: A gold insignia consisting of a blue disc with an undulating edge bearing a gold sun emitting twenty rays alternately wavy and straight, all surmounted by a green star, one point up and each point terminating on a small gold disc, on the star a griffin's head, white with gold eye, beak, and tongue; all above a gold scroll inscribed "Command and Control" in green letters.

Symbolism: The star has long been used in the United States as an emblem of police authority; it refers to the unit's mission. The griffin is a mythological creature particularly famed for the attributes of vigilance, courage, and strength and as such alludes to the brigade. In addition, the griffin is associated with the state of California where the unit was activated, which was named for a fictitious island believed to have been inhabited by griffins and abounding in gold. The radiant gold sun is taken from the California state flag. The blue disc with the wavy edge alludes to the Pacific Ocean. The colors green and yellow are used for Military Police organizations. White stands for integrity.

SHOULDER SLEEVE INSIGNIA

Description: On a vertical rectangle arched at the top and bottom with a yellow border, on a white field a green sword bearing near its point a green balance bar and scale pans, all in front of two horizontal red bars and arched overall three red stars.

Symbolism: Green and yellow are the branch colors of the Military Police Corps. The combination of the sword and scales of justice represents the duality of the Military Police mission, armed security duties and the upholding of the law. The red stars and bars on a white background are taken from the flag of the District of Columbia, home area of the unit. The flag of the District of Columbia in turn was based on the Washington family coat of arms.

DISTINCTIVE INSIGNIA

Description: A gold insignia consisting of a gold cluster of trees surmounted by a green equilateral triangle bearing three scale pans in the apex and two horizontal bars across base, all gold, and surmounting the green triangle throughout a gold inverted equilateral triangle bearing a blue fleur-de-lis, all above a three-part gold scroll inscribed, "Peace, Law, Order" in black.

Symbolism: Green and yellow are the colors used for the Military Police Corps, and balance pans are symbolically related to justice. The fleur-de-lis refers to France, and the three areas of the green triangle simulate the three rocks on the coat of arms of St. Mihiel and represent the unit's participation in that World War I campaign. The cluster of trees is used to refer to the Argonne forest and denotes the Meuse-Argonne campaign participation by the organization. The three scale pans and two bars are used to suggest the three stars and two bars on the flag of the District of Columbia and allude to the unit's home area.

HERALDIC ITEMS

- Description:* On a green nonagon, one point up, a yellow disc with embattled circumference bearing two green partizans, the upper shafts issuing saltirewise from two crenelles in base.
- Symbolism:* Green and yellow are colors used for the Military Police Corps. The circular embattled central area indicates prisoner of war camps and military security facilities whose operations are commanded, planned, and supervised by the brigade. The interior area also simulates the sun, symbolic of the dissemination of knowledge, and refers to the subordinate prisoner of war/civilian internee information center. The partizans, medieval weapons associated with guards, denote the guards provided for prisoners in confinement and for the security of military installations and facilities; the partizans are crossed to suggest control of the entrance and exit involved in the reception, search, and processing functions. Additionally, the two partizans (2), nine sides of the nonagon (9), and the circular center (0) allude to the numerical designation of the brigade.

DISTINCTIVE INSIGNIA

- Description:* A gold insignia consisting of a gold nonagon one point up, charged at the top with a green embattled disc bearing a gold acorn sprig, and issuing saltirewise from the nonagon base the upper shafts of two green partizans with blades touching on the disc and extending over both the nonagon and a green encircling scroll that terminates below the top point of the device and is inscribed in gold letters below the blades, "Custody with Honor."
- Symbolism:* The basic design was suggested by the shoulder sleeve insignia for the 290th Military Police Brigade. Green and yellow are the colors used for the Military Police Corps; the embattled circular area refers to the prisoner of war camps and military security facilities whose operations are commanded, planned, and supervised by the brigade; the radiant projections also symbolize the dissemination of knowledge and refer to the subordinate prisoner of war/civilian internees information center. The partizans, medieval weapons associated with guards, denote the guards provided for prisoners in confinement and for the security guard of military installations and facilities; the partizans are crossed to suggest control of the entrance and exit involved in the reception, search, and processing functions. The oak, an emblem signifying honor, alludes to the organization's motto; it also refers to the "Treaty Oak" in Cherokee Park, Nashville, Tennessee, and indicates the unit's origin and former location. Additionally, the two partizans (2), nine sides of the nonagon (9), and the disc (0) allude to the numerical designation of the brigade.

Symbolism: Green and yellow are colors used for the Military Police Corps. The book alludes to the Uniform Code of Military Justice and the group's capabilities for providing services required for the prevention and investigation of crime among military personnel and other persons subject to the code. The red color on the binding refers to the courage required in performance of the unit's mission. The gold rays in the background further indicate the penetrating light of investigation. The color gold represents honor, and the scales are an emblem of justice. Together with the star, which denotes law and military authority, they signify the spirit of the unit and its motto. Additionally, the twelve points of the star allude to the numerical designation of the group, and the vertical stand of the scales connotes a "1" referring to the unit's activation at Fort George G. HERALDIC ITEMS

Description: A gold insignia consisting of a vertical sword, point down, with gold blade and green hilt, and suspended from the cross-guard a pair of green scales all in front of a black base charged with a gold wavy horizontal bar, and at the top of the device a curved chain of three gold links, the hilt extending through the center link; a green scroll, suspended from the outer links enclosing the sides and base of the device, inscribed "Strength" on the left, "with" in base, and "Justice" on the right, all letters gold. The areas between the chain, scroll, and scales are pierced.

Symbolism: Green and yellow are colors used for the Military Police Corps. The scales, an emblem of justice, are supported by the cross-guard of the sword and denote the effective protection provided by the unit in the performance of its mission. The links forming a chain signify strength and together with the scales allude to the battalion's motto. The organization's former location in Des Moines, Iowa, is indicated by the black area for the city's recognition as a large printing center and for Iowa's great natural resource, the deep layers of black, fertile soil; the wavy bar is for the Des Moines river.

DISTINCTIVE INSIGNIA

Description: A gold insignia consisting of three gold bamboo trees with green leaves, on the center leaf a gold star, all between two elephants (head and forelegs) one facing right, the other facing left, in base a fountain (wavy gold and blue), below all a black scroll with a green reverse side, bearing the inscription "Peace, Justice, Freedom" in gold letters.

Symbolism: The two elephants of equal size symbolize fairness and justice. The elephant, a beast of burden in the Far East, represents the strength and ability of the 40th Military Police Battalion to perform its mission. The bamboo tree, with its young shoots and large leaves, alludes to the overall police protection and training of personnel. The gold star refers to leadership, guidance, and the high ideals of the unit. The fountain represents the unit's overseas service and also the many rivers and waterways of the Far East. Green and yellow are the colors used for the Military Police.

DISTINCTIVE INSIGNIA

Description: A gold insignia consisting of a white five-pointed star above a red hexagon, bearing throughout three white arrowheads with points conjoined at center with the vertical point of the star surmounting the lower portion of a quartered green and white lozenge charged with a Korean taeguk, all in front of a yellow circular Indian shield with two white, red-tipped feathers pendant at the sides; all above and between a green scroll, doubled gold, arced in base, the ends curving upward and terminating behind the corners of the lozenge inscribed "Our Fame Shall Never Die" in gold letters.

Symbolism: Green and yellow are the colors used for the Military Police Corps. The star, taken from the state seal of Oklahoma, together with the Indian shield from the state flag, refer to the home area of the organization. The star further alludes to a sheriff's badge and refers to the basic mission of the organization. The taeguk with the quartered lozenge represents the four campaign credits in Korea and also refers to the award of the Republic of Korea Presidential Unit Citation. The hexagon represents six of the campaigns earned in Europe during World War II, and the three arrowheads allude to assault landings. The colors red and green also refer to the French Croix de Guerre with Palm, awarded the unit during World War II.

DISTINCTIVE INSIGNIA

Description: A gold insignia consisting of a vertical gold sword, point up, on a white background bearing at the center of the blade a gold fleur-de-lis on a green and red vertically divided disk, in front of in base two wavy concentric blue bands curving upward and terminating along center sides of the disk and all beneath a green scroll, arched at the top, the ends curving inward and terminating behind the sides of the blue bands inscribed "Duty for Service" in gold letters.

Symbolism: Green and yellow are the colors used for Military Police. The sword with the divided disk bearing the fleur-de-lis alludes to war service in Europe during World War I and World War II, and the wavy blue bands simulating water refer to service in the Aleutian Islands during the latter period. The blue wavy bands also refer to the San Francisco Bay and to Alameda, former home station of the organization. The green and red disk further signifies control and refers to the basic mission of the battalion.

Symbolism: Green and yellow are colors used for the Military Police Corps. The white crescent on the blue was suggested by the flag of South Carolina to denote the unit's location and assignment to the South Carolina Army National Guard. The crescent also signifies growing brightness and, together with the gold rays, refers to the battalion's investigation and crime prevention mission. The rays, which simulate beams of light, also allude to the battalion's origin in the Coast Artillery (Harbor Defense). The maces, historic weapons used by warriors and guards as hand arms, represent the protective services provided by the organization.

COAT OF ARMS

Shield: Vert, in pairle reversed three chains throughout or overall a bezant engrailed of eight points bearing a Korean taeguk (gules and azure) in canton a fleur-de-lis of the second.

Crest: On a wreath of the colors, or and vert, a demi-bear argent collared with a wreath of three twists gules, azure, gules, grasping in his dexter claw two palm branches of the third and holding palewise a staff with banner floutant of the like charged with a cross throughout sable.

Motto: When in Need.

Symbolism: The three chains represent control and refer to the Military Police function; they also allude to the battalion's three years of service in Korea during the Korean War, the red and blue Korean taeguk on the roundel of eight points alluding to the eight Korean campaigns in which the unit participated. The fleur-de-lis alludes to the activation of the battalion in Paris, France.

The design commemorates the organization's two Republic of Korea Presidential Unit Citations. They are represented by the two branches of palm held by the bear, honored in Korea as the progenitor of the Korean race. The red and blue of the wreath combined with the white of the bear allude to the colors of the Korean national flag. The banner with the long streamer (a German type of banner called a schwenkel) bears the cross from the arms of the city of Bonn, capital of the Federal Republic of Germany, in reference to the reactivation of the battalion in Germany in 1959.

COAT OF ARMS

- Shield:* Vert, on a bend wavy or between two griffins' heads couped of the last an oriental sword sable.
- Crest:* On a wreath of the colors, or and vert, a rocky mound of the last and thereon a bamboo portcullis (gate) of three perpendicular bars proper spiked gules.
- Motto:* Security, Law, Order.
- Symbolism:* Green and yellow are the colors used for the Military Police Corps. The griffin is a mythological creature famed for the attributes of vigilance, courage, and strength and alludes to the unit. The color black suggests the robes of justices, and the sword denotes leadership and the military. The griffin heads, wavy bend, and oriental sword together refer to the unit's three activations overseas, two in Europe and one in Asia.

The bamboo portcullis alludes to Asia, and the red spikes represent Meritorious Unit Commendations, one for Korea and two for Vietnam. The rocky mound and portcullis symbolize the adverse terrain, guerrilla attacks, and transient camps during the unit's service in Korea. The portcullis and spikes also refer to security at the Long Binh Ammunition Depot and the establishment of law and order for the post at Long Binh during the Vietnam conflict.

DISTINCTIVE INSIGNIA

- Description:* A gold insignia consisting of a green four-pointed star surmounted by two gold clamps in saltire.

DISTINCTIVE INSIGNIA

Description: A gold insignia consisting of a central vertical sword, point upwards, flanked on each side by a curved feather, all intertwined with two annulets. Around the base of the device is a motto scroll bearing the legend "Take Charge" in black letters.

Symbolism: The sword is a symbolic representation of the Army, as well as signifying the sword of justice. The two feathers represent written military law, together with orders and regulations which Military Police can enforce. The two annulets refer to two of the foreign theaters in which the battalion has been active (Europe and Korea); they also represent the continuous flow of traffic, stragglers, individuals, and prisoners, all of which are concerns of Military Police.

FLAG DEVICE

The flag device is the same as the distinctive insignia.

DISTINCTIVE INSIGNIA

Description: A gold insignia consisting of a gold ancient Roman plumed helmet in front of a green laurel wreath open at the right side and all enclosed at the sides and base with a three-fold gold scroll inscribed "Justice, Loyalty, Honor" in green letters.

Symbolism: Green and yellow are the colors for the Military Police Corps. The ancient Roman helmet refers to the centurions chosen for their personal physical and moral merits and noted for their loyalty and devotion to duty. Together with the laurel wreath, an emblem borne at the top of the legion's standard, they connote the spirit of the organization. The protective function of the helmet also signifies the security and guard mission of the unit. The open laurel wreath simulates the character "C," the Roman numeral for 100, and alludes to the numerical designation of the battalion.

Description: A gold insignia consisting of a gold three-post portcullis bearing horizontally two blue fleurs-de-lis and pendant from its rings a green scroll bearing the inscription "Serving State and Nation" in gold letters.

Symbolism: Green and yellow are the colors used for Military Police. The portcullis is a medieval symbol of authority to traverse, guard, open, and/or close a gateway or door; it alludes to the unit's home state, New York, through the term "Gateway to the New World." The three posts of the portcullis represent the Eastern Mandates, Western Pacific, and Ryukyus campaigns in which the unit participated during World War II; the fleurs-de-lis refer to service in World War I.

HERALDIC ITEMS

DISTINCTIVE INSIGNIA

Description: A gold insignia consisting of a green background with five battlements at top bearing two crossed gold pikes with points upward and extending slightly beyond the outer edge of the background, overall above center a blue (ultramarine) triangle charged with a gold lion's head, in base a triangular area between the pikes of scarlet bearing a gold disc charged with a stylized white dogwood blossom with a green center, a gold bayonet, point up, extending diagonally from each side of the disc to slightly beyond the outer edge of the background; all above a semicircular gold scroll folded back at each end and inscribed "Inspired by Need" in blue letters.

Symbolism: The green background simulates the green fields of Europe, the five battlements alluding to the five campaigns of Normandy, Northern France, Rhineland, Ardennes-Alsace, and Central Europe during World War II. The blue triangle bearing the gold lion's head alludes to the unit's three campaigns, Somme Offensive, Ypres-Lys, and Flanders 1918, with the British in France and Belgium during World War I. The two bayonets extending from the scarlet field symbolize the unit's service as combat engineers during World War II. The red and green colors represent the unit's two decorations, the French Croix de Guerre with Palm, World War II; and the Belgian Fourragere 1940. The crossed pikes, ancient weapons used by sentinels and patrols, allude to the unit's current designation. The unit's present location is represented by the dogwood blossom, the state flower of North Carolina. Green and yellow are colors used for the Military Police Corps.

- Description:* A silver insignia consisting of a red and blue arrowhead surmounted by a spearhead of white affixed to a green shaft over all two silver barongs in saltire. Attached below the device a silver scroll inscribed "Guardians of Honour" in black letters.
- Symbolism:* The arrowhead alludes to New Guinea, a campaign in which the unit fought in World War II. The spearhead, representative of the arrowhead on the campaign streamer, is indicative of the battalion's participation in the assault landing on New Guinea. The crossed barongs refer to service in the Philippines during World War II. The colors red, white, and blue represent the Philippine Presidential Unit Citation, awarded the unit for service during World War II. The blue area is also commemorative of the Distinguished Unit Citation (now called the Presidential Unit Citation [Army]) awarded the battalion. Green and yellow is the color for the Military Police Corps. The upright position of the spear further alludes to the capabilities of the battalion in its current mission.

Attached below the shield a two-segmented gold scroll inscribed "We Serve" on the dexter segment and "The Fighter" on the sinister segment in blue letters.

Symbolism: The wedge-shaped areas allude to the control mission in law enforcement; the billets referring to the dispersal, restriction, or containment of elements in opposition to the regulations for the preservation of tranquility and order established by law. The two red wavy bars allude to the two campaigns in World War II in which the unit served as an element of the 296th Infantry, indicated by the gold bastion with sentry bartizan upon a blue background taken from the shield of the coat of arms of that organization. It also denotes the unit's assignment in Puerto Rico.

DISTINCTIVE INSIGNIA

Description: A gold insignia consisting of three horizontal wavy blue bars between a gold demi-sun at the top and a light green mound in base, all surmounted vertically by a red ragged staff, and saltirewise by two gold spears, and arced around base from the spearheads, passing over the ferrules of the spear staffs, a green scroll inscribed "Flying Steel" in gold letters.

Symbolism: Green and yellow are the colors used for the Military Police Corps. Scarlet and gold allude to the unit's origin as artillery, and blue refers to the unit's infantry assignment. The sun symbolizes knowledge and vigilance, and a spear is emblematic of leadership, protection, and guidance; together they represent the overall mission and capabilities of the organization. The sun, spears, green mound, and wavy blue bars, the latter a symbol for water, were suggested by the great seal of the state of California and refer to the allocation of the organization. The design also suggests the bay area of San Francisco and alludes to San Mateo, California, the unit's home.

Symbolism: Green and yellow are the colors used for Military Police. The Gothic arch is symbolic of areas comprising the Ardennes-Alsace, Rhineland, and Central Europe campaigns and is used to represent the unit's participation there during World War II. Red and green refer to the French Croix de Guerre awarded the unit for action along the Moselle River, represented by the wavy beam. The fleur-de-lis is symbolic of France and refers to both the Normandy and Northern France campaigns. The black disc simulates a cannon ball and together with the colors scarlet and gold (yellow) alludes to artillery, the unit's former branch. A doorway implies protection and barrier and with the scale of justice refers to the overall mission of the organization.

DISTINCTIVE INSIGNIA

Description: A gold insignia consisting of two blue swords crossed saltirewise surmounted by a green four-pointed star bearing at its center a yellow roundel charged with a blue fleur-de-lis and all encircled by a continuous green scroll divided in four folds; the upper folds inscribed "Forged from Freedom" in gold letters.

Symbolism: Green and yellow are the colors used for Military Police. The unit's service as an infantry organization during World War II in the Aleutians and in France is symbolized by the two blue swords, a polar star, and a fleur-de-lis. The star is further reference to the badge of the early law enforcement office and alludes to the basic mission of the organization. The gold roundel or bezant refers to the nickname of the state of California, known as the "Land of Gold," and home area of the battalion.

DISTINCTIVE INSIGNIA

Description: A gold insignia consisting of a gold vertical lightning flash, point up, extending over and in front of three stylized green white-capped mountains, the larger center segment rising in back of two below, all in front of a gold sun with rays arched around the mountain peaks; overall upon a threefold gold scroll forming three arcs, one above the other to base, the inscription "Loyalty, Patience, Integrity" in black letters.

Symbolism: Green and yellow are the colors used for Military Police. The lightning flash refers to the unit's swift apprehension and performance in emergency situations. The gold sun with rays indicative of penetrating knowledge alludes to the battalion's crime investigation capabilities and the command and control required for correctional duties. The sun also alludes to Golden, Colorado, where the unit is located. The snow-capped mountains suggested by the state seal denote the organization's assignment to the Colorado Army National Guard. The vertical flash, the combined three mountains, the three-segmented flash and threefold scroll, and the triple snow-capped peaks connote the numerical designation of the battalion.

DISTINCTIVE INSIGNIA

Description: A gold insignia consisting of a shield blazoned: per chevron abased checky or and vert, in chief a sea lion holding in dexter paw a dagger palewise all gules, the sea lion charged on the shoulder with a mullet azure fimbriated of the first. Attached below the shield a tripartated scroll or inscribed Urbi et Orbi (To the City and to the World) sable.

Symbolism: Green and yellow are the colors used for Military Police. The sea lion alludes to the Philippines where the unit was originally activated in 1945. The chevron is a sign of authority. The checky pattern, from the arms of the city of Pittsburgh, refers to the city where the unit was reactivated and affiliated with the Pittsburgh Police Department. The red and blue are taken from the Philippine Presidential Unit Citation and represent that award. The mullet from the national flag of the Philippines alludes to service in the Pacific Theater during World War II.

DISTINCTIVE INSIGNIA

Description: A gold insignia consisting of a green seven-pointed star, one point down, surmounted by a gold flying griffin.

Symbolism: The star, symbol of guidance and direction, is an emblem of police authority long used in the United States. The points of the star are seven in number for the seven qualities required in all the various military police services. These qualities are prudence, tolerance, truth, justice, fortitude, temperance, and brotherhood. The griffin is a fictitious creature with the head, wings, and talons of an eagle conjoined to the hinder parts of a lion; it symbolizes vigilance, strength, and protection and refers to the Military Police mission. In addition, the griffin is associated with justice through Nemesis, the Greek goddess of retribution whose chariot was drawn by griffins. It also refers to California, the unit's home area which early explorers thought to be inhabited by griffins. The colors green and yellow are used for units of the Military Police Corps.

- Description:* A gold insignia consisting of a gold winged demi-griffin, its head concealing the lower portion of a red fleur-de-lis, holding in his right talon a raised gold sword, its upper portion in front of the fleur-de-lis and his left talon suspended above a gold star; all above a green scroll, the ends curling inward and bearing the inscription "Guard and Defend" in gold letters.
- Symbolism:* Green and yellow are the colors used for Military Police. The griffin, a fabulous creature with the body of a lion and the head and wings of an eagle, is a symbol of courage and eternal vigilance, attributes of a Military Police organization. Furthermore, the griffin, in holding a raised sword in one talon and the other suspended protectively above a star (symbol of enlightenment), alludes to the basic mission of the organization to "guard and defend." The fleur-de-lis refers to France where the organization was first activated.

Symbolism: Green and yellow are the branch colors of the Military Police Corps. The beautiful beaches and sunny climate of the Virgin Islands are symbolized by the blue for the ocean, the white wavy bar for surf, and the golden rays for the sun. The fasces (a bundle of rods bound together about an axe with the blade projecting) is a symbol of authority and represents the unit's mission to uphold law and order. The white star is also emblematic of authority and order. The green disc is an ancient shield shape and stands for the unit's protective role. The upright position of the fasces also alludes to the "Defend" and "Protect" aspects of the unit's motto. The olive branch symbolizes its peace-keeping mission.

Glossary of Lineage Terms

- ACTIVATE. To bring into being or establish a unit that has been constituted. Usually personnel and equipment are assigned at this time; however, a unit may be active at zero strength, that is, without personnel or equipment. This term was not used before 1921. It is never used when referring to Army National Guard units; and only since World War II has it been used in connection with Army Reserve units. (See also ORGANIZE.)
- ALLOT. To assign a unit to one of the components of the United States Army. The present components of the Army are the Regular Army (RA), the Army National Guard (ARNG), and the Army Reserve (AR), which was formerly known as the Organized Reserves and the Organized Reserve Corps. During World War I units were also allotted to the National Army, and during World War II to the Army of the United States. A unit may be withdrawn from any component except the Army National Guard and allotted to another. The new allotment, however, does not change the history, lineage, and honors of the unit.
- ASSIGN. To make a unit part of a larger organization and place it under that organization's command and control until it is relieved from the assignment. As a rule, only divisional and separate brigade assignments are shown in unit lineages.
- CONSOLIDATE. To merge or combine two or more units into one new unit. The new unit may retain the designation of one of the original units or it may have a new designation, but it inherits the history, lineage, and honors of all of the units affected by the merger. In the nineteenth century, consolidation was frequently a merger of several understrength units to form one full-strength unit. At the present time, in the Regular Army and the Army Reserve, units are usually consolidated when they are inactive or when only one of the units is active; therefore, personnel and equipment are seldom involved. In the Army National Guard, on the other hand, active units are often consolidated, and their personnel are combined in the new unit.
- CONSTITUTE. To place the designation of a new unit on the official rolls of the Army.
- CONVERT. To transfer a unit from one branch of the Army to another, for example, from infantry to armor. Such a move always requires a redesignation, with the unit adopting the name of its new branch; however, there is no break in the historical continuity of the unit. If the unit is active, it must also be reorganized under a new table of organization and equipment (TOE).
- DEMOBILIZE. To remove the designation of a unit from the official rolls of the Army. If the unit is active, it must also be inactivated. This term is used in unit lineages only when referring to the period during and immediately after World War I. (For other periods, see DISBAND.)
- DESIGNATION. The official title of a unit, consisting usually of a number and a name.
- DISBAND. To remove the designation of a unit from the official rolls of the Army. If the unit is active, it must also be inactivated.

- ELEMENT. A unit that is assigned to or part of a larger organization. (See also ORGANIC ELEMENT.)
- INACTIVATE. To place a unit that is not currently needed in an inoperative status without assigned personnel or equipment. The unit's designation, however, is retained on the rolls of the Army, and it can be reactivated whenever needed. Its personnel and equipment are reassigned to one or more active units, but its organizational properties and trophies are put in storage. When the unit is activated again, it is assigned new personnel and equipment, but it keeps its old history, honors, and organizational properties and trophies. This term has been used only since 1921. Before that time units either remained active or were removed from the rolls of the Army.
- ORDER INTO ACTIVE MILITARY SERVICE. To place an Army Reserve unit on full-time active duty usually during a war or a major crisis, such as the Berlin crisis of 1961-62. After completing its active duty, the unit may be inactivated or it may be released from active military service, reverting to reserve status. This phrase does not apply to Army Reserve units on annual active duty training.
- ORGANIC ELEMENT. A unit that is an integral part of a larger organization, for example, a lettered company of a battalion or regiment.
- ORGANIZE. To assign personnel and equipment to a unit and make it operative, that is capable of performing its mission.
- RECONSTITUTE. To restore to the official rolls of the Army a unit that has been disbanded or demobilized. The reconstituted unit may have a new designation, but it retains its former history, lineage, and honors.
- REDESIGNATE. To change a unit's official name or number or both. Redesignation is a change of title only; the unit's history, lineage, and honors remain the same. Active as well as inactive units can be redesignated, but personnel and equipment of an active unit are not changed unless it is reorganized at the same time.
- REORGANIZE. To change the structure of a unit in accordance with a new table of organization and equipment (TOE), or to change from one type of unit to another within the same branch of the Army, for example, from mechanized to airborne infantry. (For reorganizations involving a new branch, see CONVERT.) When referring to the Army National Guard, however, this term also means to organize an active unit again.
- TRANSFER LESS PERSONNEL AND EQUIPMENT. To move a unit from one place to another without its personnel and equipment. The transfer is, therefore, merely a move on paper. The unit is usually reorganized at its new location with newly assigned personnel and equipment, but it retains its own lineage, honors, and organizational properties and trophies. The original personnel and equipment are reassigned to one or more units.
